OVERVIEW

John Holper is an experienced construction and real estate trial attorney. John has more than 30 years of experience representing commercial and residential owners, commercial landlords and tenants, lenders, business entities, developers, contractors, subcontractors, material suppliers, architects, and engineers. John works with his clients not only when a dispute arises, but also on the front end by applying his litigation experience to help draft and negotiate construction-related contracts in order to manage risk and avoid litigation whenever possible.

John possesses extensive knowledge in such areas as construction contract formation, review and disputes, construction defects, warranty issues, mechanic's liens, surety, payment and performance bonds, contractor licensing and governmental enforcement proceedings, insurance coverage disputes, landlord/tenant disputes, easements, boundary disputes, condemnation, and restrictive covenants. In addition to his construction and real estate practice, John has also litigated a variety of commercial disputes including matters involving shareholder disputes, creditor's remedies actions, and commercial breach of contract actions.
